Sheriff to take over security

■ POLICE: District campus officers vote in sheriff take-over.

By SOTIVEAR SIM
STAR REPORTER

Police officers from all nine campuses in the Los Angeles Community College District have approved legislation that would allow the Sheriff's Department to take over their duties for the district.

"This has been an ongoing issue for the past three years," said Captain Michael Habicht of Valley College.

The decision is not final yet, as the college district board of trustees must look over the issue and then vote on it. Once that is done, negotiation between the district and the sheriff's department can begin.

"A lot of us would like to stay and help," Captain Habicht said.

A major reason why the officers voted for the change is because they have been working without a new contract since 1992.

"The inability to gain a fair and equitable contract from the district after two and a half years of failed negotiations caused the officers to vote in favor of the vote," Al Reddick, president of the Police Officers Association, said.

The majority of officers working on the campus will be relocated to custody duty or court detail. Many of the officers will then become deputy sheriffs.

"They perceive they will get better pay and benefits," Officer G. Tan said. "They would like to be treated better."

The officers were getting paid 19.2 percent below everyone else in the district. "They refused to treat us like a first class department," Reddick said.

After negotiations are done, the campus police officers, with more than 300 years of cumulative experience on staff, will be replaced by the sheriff's department. The change are estimated to take about six months.

"The merger will be more cost effective and allow much more professional department," Reddick said. "They have more financial resources."

The campus police officers now work for the president and get their paychecks through the district, but once the sheriff's department arrives they won't be paid by the district.

The sheriff's department will have one officer in the mornings and afternoon and one in the evening and the rest will be security guards.

"They are a fine organization," Captain Habicht said. "It will be a period of adjustment for all."

■ ARCHITECTURE: Important postwar build- ings viewed by historical society.

By KARLA S. GUTIERREZ
STAR REPORTER

A self driving tour of the San Fernando Valley's modern architecture was held on Nov. 18 and 19, sponsored by The Los Angeles Conservancy's Modern Committee.

Day one of the tour focused on the communities east of the 405 Freeway. Included in the tour were North Hollywood, Universal City, Toluca Lake, Valley Village and Studio City.

Day two featured the areas of the west valley.

The tour included more than 100 buildings built between 1940 and 1970. Lloyd Wright as well as other famous and lesser known architects were among the highlights.

The tour also included several stops with photo exhibits such as Burbank City Hall, Van Nuys Civic Center and others.

On Saturday evening a reception was held at Valley.

"It's the last stop of the first day", said Chris Nichols former chairman of the Los Angeles Conservancy. "We're examining its architecture and its 50's modern architecture and its role in the development of the valley."

Los Angeles Valley College opened in temporary headquarters on the campus of Van Nuys High School in 1949. It moved to its present site, a former dairy farm in 1951. The campus retains its original open character, with covered esplanade connecting the main rows of low slung single story classrooms, according to the guide "How Modern Was My Valley?"

The Valley College art gallery hosted an exhibit of the work of architect Wayne McAllister who is known for his architectural work in the Valley and Las Vegas. Among his designs are drive-ins, hotels, nightspots, and dinner houses. One of his most famous buildings is the Hotel Aguas Caliente in Mexico.

Valley has new student body president

■ GOVERNANCE: New president steps up to run ASU.

By NJEHU GATABAKI
STAR REPORTER

The nation might not have a new president yet, but Valley does.

In a small office located in Monarch Hall, behind a well-organized desk, sat the new president of the Associated Student Union at Valley locked in a discussion with three other students. A framed picture of a slender lady with golden brown hair hung on the white wall opposite the desk.

The woman is Wendy Monroy, who recently took over President Edward Santos' position when he stepped down last month. She is the fourth Latino woman to be elected as ASU president at Valley.

"The ASU has moved from conservative to more modern and diversified since its inception," Monroy said. "Before, there were pictures of men hanging on the wall in the conference room. Today there are 10 pictures of women."

Salvador Aguilar/Valley Star

Monroy also served as the president for Club Latino United for Education. She said it was not always that way.

"I am shy naturally," she said. "When I first came to Valley, I didn't know anyone."

The eldest of five sisters, and a child of two working parents, Monroy expressed her love for reading and swimming. "I love to swim," she said. "Actually, I have a pool at my house."

A recipient of the volunteer of the year award and a past member of the Roosevelt High School French club and drill team, Monroy said she does not have a lot of spare time. "I'm constantly working on activities," she said.

After graduating from Roosevelt High School in 1998, she said the transition from Los Angeles, where she had been living, to the San Fernando Valley was hard on her, and she felt she had to do something.

She joined the Chemistry, Math and Success program in her second semester and began to focus. "I became motivated and I met the faculty and others," she said. "It really helped me."

For Monroy, the ASU is a good opportunity to meet other students. Most of the people that know Monroy generally have warm feelings and opinions about the new leader.

"She's really a good friend," said Tanya Ortiz, a friend and co-worker. "I think she's doing a great job."

Carlos Lopez, who has worked with Monroy for the past year, categorized Monroy as a person who gets things done. "She is a good leader, and she's also organized."

As a sociology major, Monroy is a peer member on the campus and took a year to volunteer in the Women's Career Cottage, which is a program sponsored through the Service Learning Program.

"I like knowing that I did something, and I met someone today," said Monroy, who plans to go into a career as a social worker or a lawyer. "I realized that it was a field that I wanted to get into, so I did it. And now I am the president."

Valley Star Editorial

Open spaces. Clean beaches. The children of tomorrow may never experience the thrill of discovering hidden caves or mysterious trails, except in the world of virtual reality. Good news for game makers; bad news for everyone else.

Suburban sprawl creeps up insidiously, and open spaces soon become luxury homes or shopping malls. A recent Sierra Club article reported that 340 acres of undeveloped land in Claremont, Calif., is being eyed by developers. This is just the latest victim to suburban overcrowding and greedy builders.

Remember spending lazy summer days as a child running through vacant fields, picking wildflowers, or playing beneath the overgrown grass and bushes, or splashing in the ocean, running from the waves? Tomorrow's children face a world of paved parking lots and indoor activities.

Besides suburban sprawl, dangers invisible to the eye linger everywhere. Bacteria counts close beaches and the danger of skin cancer keeps everyone indoors on the most inviting of summer days. The ozone layer protects life on Earth from harmful ultraviolet radiation, which can cause skin cancer, cataracts and a weakened immune system, which is why reports of global ozone depletion frighten the public.

According to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the ozone layer over Los Angeles decreased by more than 10 percent from 1979 to 1994. Chlorofluorocarbons and other ozone depleting substances such as refrigerants, insulating foams, and solvents are to blame for this depletion.

There is good news. Organizations concerned with the environment, such as the Sierra Club, fight suburban sprawl and water pollution, and the EPA has helped set standards to restore depleted ozone levels within 50 years, according to their website.

However, this is merely a projection and projections can change. Public opinion on environmental issues change, and people elect officials whose priorities are diametrically opposed to environmental reform. Solutions that were touted in the past as environmentally saving devices, such as electric cars and solar energy, have been left by the wayside in pursuit of the instant gratification of sport utility vehicles and luxury cars.

But what kind of legacy will this leave to tomorrow's children? America's vast resources can be saved or squandered. Choices and sacrifices made to drive electric vehicles rather than energy consuming automobiles, and to live in well-developed neighborhoods rather than in new homes built on ancient wetlands, may seem difficult but may also make the difference between a world paved with asphalt or a world that made America what it is: a rugged and expansive wilderness accessible to all.

Redefining the Christmas message

By ROBERT B. CURRIER
STAR WRITER

With Christmas slamming its commercialized image down student's throats, one wonders what is really being celebrated. Christmas, historically, was never an entirely religious affair and is a relatively modern invention of crass overindulgence and gross commercialism that is nearly as old as the holiday itself.

The earliest celebrations of the Nativity began surprisingly late. No record of official observance of Christ's birth surfaced until the fourth century, when Constantine, a Christian convert, was emperor of Rome. The first mention of a Nativity feast appears in the Philocalian calendar, a Roman document from A.D. 354, which lists December 25 as the day of Jesus' birth in Bethlehem of Judea.

The most widely held view states that the holiday was an intentional "Christianization" of Saturnalia and other pagan festivals. In the third and fourth centuries, the church in Rome found itself in fierce competition with popular pagan religions and mystery cults, most of them involving sun worship. From the middle of December through the first of January, Romans would engage in feasts and drunken revelry, paying homage to their gods and marking the winter solstice.

In colonial times, Christ's birth was celebrated as a wildly social event. Virginians hunted, danced and feasted, while poor city dwellers partied and thronged the streets in boisterous demonstrations, begging for food and drink at the homes of the wealthy.

But Christmas in America was about change, and it did so quickly and with purpose. By the early 1820s, cities had mushroomed with industrialization and Christmas celebrations had turned increasingly boisterous and sometimes violent. Concerned patricians, who included Clement Clarke Moore, author of "A Visit From St. Nicholas," began a campaign to move Christmas off the streets and into the family circle. Moore's classic poem of St. Nick provided a new mythology for this Christmas makeover. Far from being the creature of ancient Dutch folklore, Moore's St. Nick depicted a "jolly fat boy" who bore gifts for the children.

The nation's merchants favored this turn of events. The new tradition of Christmas gift giving created an instant retail bonanza, and merchants began to promote the season.

By the early 20th century, stores had largely abandoned overtly religious themes and helped build the reinvented traditions of modern Christmas. The shopping season now pumps an estimated $37 billion into the nation's economy and makes the American Christmas larger than the gross national product of Ireland.

No matter how students celebrate it — in the quiet of their homes or churches, or suburban shopping malls — the arrival of Christmas forces us to confront our ideals and observe our relationships with families, communities and faith. Christmas traditions should not be a commercialized acceptance, but instead challenge students to believe they can be better people, despite themselves. And maybe, just maybe, share a little peace on Earth and goodwill to others.

Symphony orchestra Czech's out campus

■ MUSIC: Students cross boundaries of time and space by honoring Czech composers.

By ROBERT B. CURRIER
STAR REPORTER

The Valley Symphony Orchestra, with musical director Robert Chauls, presented "Czech it Out" on Saturday, November 18th at the Little Theatre.

Yumi Man, a 13-year-old violinist who is already a veteran of the concert stage, joined the all-Czech program.

"I've been playing since I was five," she said. "I love this style of music. Well I like most any style really, fast or sad."

"This is the first or last symphony of the millennium, depending on how you view it," Chauls said. The symphony began with three Slavonic Dances by Antonin Dvorak, after which Man was introduced and played his beautiful Violin Concerto.

The Violin Concerto (1879-80) is dedicated to the greatest violinist of the time, Joseph Joachim, a friend of both Dvorak's and Brahms, who helped Dvorak with the solo part, but never played it. It is definitely a product of the nationalist enthusiasm that became characteristic of Dvorak's music by the late 1870s.

During the latter half of the nineteenth century, many composers turned to folk elements within their own countries to animate much of their music. Dvorak, the most notable in the Czech area of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and the younger of the two

The evening concluded with a Smetana's cycle of six symphonic poems, "Ma vlast," which means "My fatherland." It presented selected aspects of Czech legend, history, and scenery. Vlatava is the most famous piece in the cycle and tells how two springs, one warm and the other cold, arise in the depths of the forest of Sumava, and unite to make a brook which in time becomes the river Moldau.

Choir sings history of love

Karila Gutierrez/Valley Star

Singers in the Philharmonic Choir sing love songs through out the ages on Nov. 19 at the Little Theater.

■ REPERTOIRE: A wide range of love songs spanning the life of love through music.

By E. N. ZACARIAS
STAR REPORTER

The Philharmonic Choir presented a portrait of love with divine voices and a selection of songs that even to this day still holds a significant meaning.

Lead by conductor Jennifer Kelly, and accompanied by HaeSun Pope's remarkable piano performance, the Choir graced the Little Theatre on Nov. 19.

For the first three pieces, the Madrigals started things off with early Renaissance songs of love such as "O Lady Fair," which was a pleasant beginning for this evening's performance. It also established their remarkable vocal range as well.

Then the entire choir, made up of sopranos, altos, tenors, and basses, took the audience through Monteverdi's "Hear the Murmuring Waters" to "Sonnet 116," which had words by William Shakespeare but was arranged by Valley College student Charles Horton for the choir to sing.

"O Lovely Night" a piece sung by a single member of the choir and the conductor herself, was beautifully and tender.

"If there's anybody that knows about love, it's Johannes Brahms," Kelly said.

Truly the compositions of Brahms transcends time and the choir proves this by their rendition of "The May Night" which was quite moving. Then, taking a break from choral singing, a marvelous piano duet with Pope and choir singer Judie Stroh was the evening's only all-instrumental moment.

The choir moves through the timelines to perform folk love songs such as "Beautiful Dreamer" to "Barbara Allen." While the comedic "I Wish I Was Single Again," sung by the men, was refreshing to hear mostly because here, the choir shows a sense of humor.

They even presented Irish folk-songs such as "My Gentle Harp" and "Johnny, I Hardly Knew Ye"—which according to Kelly, was hard to sing because it requires various vocal ranges. Then the Madrigals closed the show withh "A Red, Red Rose" which was like the closing of a chapter in the long history that is the theme of love.

The evening was a lesson in love through songs beautifully sung while intermingling with Pope's superb piano. Using a style that is tender, emotional, and humorous, the Philharmonic Choir—which will celebrate the International Day of Choral Singing on Dec. 10 in Monarch Hall—expressed a great affection for singing and the music itself.

Wide receiver Eric Felton, number 19, came close to having a touchdown but couldn't hold on to the ball. The Monarchs scored on their next possession. This was the final game of the season for the Monarchs as they tried to spoil the hopes of the Cougars who are at the top of the Northern Division. The game was characterized by staunch defensive efforts by both teams. The Monarchs held the number one offense in the conference to 21 points.

Pigskins rally in finale

■FOOTBALL: The Monarchs went toe with the College of the Canyon in a close game that could of been won with a field goal.

By SOTIVEAR SIM and VICTOR CORONA

In the season finale the Monarchs faced top ranked College of the Canyons, who came into the game 5-1 in the division, to try to spoil their hopes of capturing the lead in the Northern Division but the Monarchs lost 21-20 in the final minutes with a touchdown run by the Cougars.

The Monarchs had an opportunity to take back the lead in the final seconds, but had their 30 yard field goal attempt blocked to squelch any hopes of an upset.

"College of the Canyons are overrated, they're not as good as people think they are," defensive end Terrence Chapman said.

The fourth was also plagued by a questionable call by the referees that gave the Cougar another opportunity for a first down that eventually led them to score a touchdown in the final minutes.

"The referees cheated us out of a win," Julian Battle said. "They [Cougars] had a fourth and five and the referees called a illegal procedure that gave them an automatic first down."

The Monarchs played in the first half of the game scoring 17 unanswered points in the second. They went into halftime with a 17-14 lead over the sixth ranked team in the state.

The Monarch defense held the number offense in the conference to a mere 14 points in the first half with the help of cornerback Darold Butler and safety Hassan Abdul-Malik, who both had interceptions.

Dallas Enoch again had a solid game at the quarterback position completing 19 of 28 passes for 127 yards and one touchdown. His prime receiver was Dan Schneider, who had six reception for 93 yards.

The Cougars tough defense limited the Monarchs running game holding Roderick Thomas for only 62 yards on 22 carries. Despite the rough season the Monarchs have endured, they have made solids games against the top teams in their conference.

They finished season with a 2-8 record overall and 2-5 record in their conference.

Hoopster fall short of victory

■BASKETBALL: The Men's basketball team lose home opener.

By VICTOR CORONA
STAR REPORTER

Playing at home for the first time this year, the Monarch's basketball team fell short of pulling out a 17 point second half deficit losing on Tuesday 62 to 59 to the Oxnard Condors. In a game that feature numerous runs, the Monarchs struck first with a 12 to 0 run that helped the team get out to a 21 to five lead.

The 16 point lead wouldn't last long, as everything would go down hill from that point on. After an intentional foul was called on Monarch reserve guard Song Cun for fouling Condor guard Keron Wilkerson on a lay-up.

The Condors responded with a 20 to 4 run that tied the game at 27. Seconds later the Monarchs lost their lead and finished the half down 31 to 30 after being out scored 24 to 9.

The start of the second half was even worse for the Monarchs, as the Condors started the half on 18 to 2 run that gave Oxnard a 49 to 32 lead.

Frustrated with the starters play Monarch coach Doug Michelson took all five starters out and substituted them with five reserves.

Two of the reserves, guard Chanzie Wanshington and forward Albert Strickland, combined to score eight points to cut the lead to ten at 50 to 40 with eight minutes to go in the game.

30 seconds later the coach brought the starters back in with the team down 13. Using a full court press, the Monarchs went on a 15 to 6 run, pulling the team within one point of tying the Condors at 56 to 55 with 3:30 left in the game.

The Condors held the Monarch's late rush by scoring seven points in the last minutes of the game. The comeback took most of the energy out of the Monarchs as they only scored two points in the last 3:30.

The loss drops the Monarchs to six and three.

The team now gets ready to travel to Costa Mesa to compete in the Orange Coast Classic today.

Cross Country

Lucky 13 in State Finals

■CROSS COUNTRY: Six freshman lead the men's cross country team out of the depths of mediocrity and to the 13th best team in California.

By SOTIVEAR SIM
STAR REPORTER

It was all worth it. All the blood, sweat and tears that come with a cross country season paid off as the men's cross country team captured the 13th spot against the best community college teams in the state with a score of 345.

They missed capturing the number 12 spot by a slim two point margin.

"It's a nice way to finish a season," coach Francois Wolman said.

The State Finals fielded 28 teams from all over California to battle it out on the track. The top 14 teams from northern California faced off with the top 14 teams from southern California.

The State meet was held in Fresno, where the cooler weather played a factor in the race.

The Monarchs began their run for the state when they finished ninth in the Del Mar state prelims to qualify for state. "We are about the ninth best team in Southern California.

In Del Mar they were the second Western State Conference team to finish, avenging a defeat earlier against conference rivals Moorpark and Ventura.

"If we were on we could of finished as high as 12 in the state," Wolman said.

This is a huge improvement from last year where they were in the bottom tier of their conference.

Under the guidance of coach Wolman the Monarchs have improved to third in their conference, but could have easily been second. At the end of the season, Wolman was named Western State Conference Coach of the Year. "It was a big improvement from last year."

The race started out well with the top five runners in their usual order, with Zak Aatti leading the pack followed closely by Leon Buchanan and the reliable Ryan Rosdail. The anchors were Michael Collins and Alfredo Murillo.

"The race went by very fast," Rosdail said.

The race was going fine with Aatti in the lead group, but mysteriously stopped running and began to walk the final 200 meters of the race.

Aatti who is usually the first Monarch to pass the finish line came in second behind Buchanan. Aatti finished 37th with a time of 21:24.

Buchanan edged out Aatti by a few seconds with a 34th place finish with a time of 21:19.

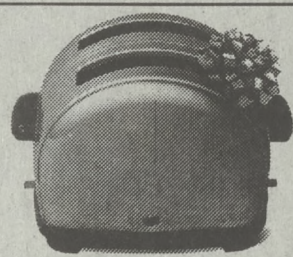

"If our number one guy ran normally we would of easily taken 12th in the state, but I'm happy with the season," coach Wolman said. "The team was on when it counted."

The great season by the Monarchs can be used by the coaching staff as part of their sales pitch to prospective runners for next year.

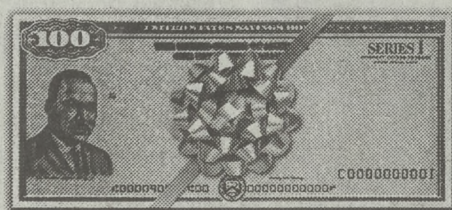

"We have six freshman this year, so hopefully we will get some top notch athletes that can come and take over for Zak," Wolman said.

With one week off for Thanksgiving, it's back to training for the men's cross country team as they gear up for the upcoming track season.

Expect them to turn some heads next season.
